One man, one dream, one sound. With his new album “Ramblin’ Man”, Rusty Stone fulfills a long-held wish – to create a completely self-produced, acoustic-driven record that captures his deep love for blues and genuine, handcrafted music.

Produced, recorded, mixed, and mastered entirely by Rusty Stone in 2025 at the Mill Way Studio in Switzerland, the album features twelve original songs, all written and composed by him. But he didn’t stop there – Rusty played every single instrument himself, from various acoustic guitars (in multiple tunings) to bass, mandolin, banjo, ukulele (on “Have Fun Tonight”), harmonica, several slide guitars, and of course, vocals.

The result is an intimate, authentic, and musically rich album that honors the roots of the blues while telling deeply personal stories. Tracks like “Nothing to Regret” offer autobiographical glimpses into Rusty’s life, while songs such as “Wicked and Wild” and “Dirty Blues” deliver the kind of playful, suggestive humor once found in the works of the old blues masters. The album closes with the instrumental “Spanish Dream”, a delicate and soulful piece on classical guitar.

“Ramblin’ Man” is more than an album – it’s a tribute to the blues, to musical freedom, and to the dream of doing it all yourself.

A record that proves: real blues comes from the heart – and sometimes from one single room in Switzerland.
